

'Will the pitch be wet and horrible? Quite possibly'

Yeovil Town manager Darren Way explores all the wiles to cause an upset.

Jim White reports

Darren Way has had a busy week. In addition to preparing his League Two side to face Manchester United in Friday's FA Cup fourth-round tie at Huish Park, the Yeovil Town manager has been planning the after-game party.

"I'll try to find a nice bottle of wine and someone I trust is sourcing that as we speak," says Way when asked the now customary question of what form of hospitality he intended to offer Jose Mourinho. "I also want to make sure we can offer him a good, Somerset cider because, if he's coming down here, it's important he's privy to what we drink." Which, given the strength of the brew, suggests, while Mourinho is unlikely to win the Double this season, at least when he leaves Somerset there is every chance he will be seeing double.

"To be going up against him is an unbelievable story," adds Way. "He must have more shelves than Ikea for his silverware. It's a special moment." The sense of anticipation of that moment is everywhere around Yeovil's stadium. Even as the manager speaks, a gantry is being built for the television cameras behind the open terracing
